

SHAKING THE FAMILY TREE

THE RECORDS OF PORTLAND'S EASTERN CEMETERY

Compiled by William B. Jordan, Jr.

The origins of the Eastern Cemetery as Portland's earliest burial ground are now unknown. It is evident that the first use of the area for that purpose occurred during the seventeenth-century prior to the Indian wars.

The general poverty of the seventeenth-century settlers apparently prevented the use of inscribed gravestones in most instances. At the present time there are no known seventeenth-century graves in the Eastern Cemetery; the oldest surviving stone is that of Mary Green who died on 23 May 1717. When City Engineer William A. Goodwin conducted his survey of the cemetery in 1890, no gravestone was found that predated it.

Local historians, however, have always insisted that the back section now bordering Federal Street is the earliest. There is common agreement that, in all likelihood, George Cleeve and other early settlers are buried there. In his generally reliable History of Portland, William Willis, in 1866, states: "Here the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep. Here repose the remains of the eminent men who have adorned our town during two centuries, . . . the humble villager, the noble company of Christian men and women, who having passed through the vicissitudes of our many sided life, rest in peace within the bosom of the silent grave."

According to Goodwin's survey, the decade of the 1820s, when the cemetery expanded to Congress Street and embraced approximately six acres, witnessed the largest number of burials. During that decade there were 676 interments identifiable as of 1890.

Regulation of the cemetery by the municipal government was extremely casual until late in the nineteenth century. Method and time of burial, and by whom, as well as the removal of bodies, were specified by the bylaws as early as 1798. Little attempt was made to establish family lots throughout the years of its most intensive use as a burial ground. In addition, there is no indication that any care was lavished upon its upkeep in the same period.

Vandalism is by no means a recent problem in the Eastern Cemetery. The incident rate as well as the magnitude of destruction has been greater in this century. On 29 May 1816, the selectmen published a warning of punishment in the Eastern Argus in the wake of a particularly damaging foray by "some evil minded person or persons." Portland's genius loci of the nineteenth century, John Neal, wrote on 28 May 1828 in his newspaper the Yankee, an outraged editorial condemning the vandalism of that era. He admonished his fellow townsmen to visit the Eastern Cemetery:

Look about you . . . and there you may see the very grave stones broken down for sport, and shattered to pieces in play, by mere children, and before the very faces of twelve thousand living people, who are related, every one of them, to those who sleep there, and to whom the outrage is offered.

Just think what might be made of the burial-ground at the top of the hill, if proper and speedy measures were taken. . . . Yet, if you were to wander the world over in search of a spot worthy of being set apart for the burial place of one more beautiful than this to which I allude . . .

But enough, they who have any sort of feeling . . . must be ready to cry out with shame and horror at the coarse and brutal outrage that is offered every day, of the week, and every hour of the day, to the tomb-stones and grave-stones there . . .

If a reward be not offered for the discovery of these wretches, the people of this town deserve to see their wives and little ones dug up and scattered to the four winds of heaven, or launched upon the waters of Casco Bay.

Although Neal wrote the editorial 151 years ago, conditions are far worse today.

In the latter part of the nineteenth century various individuals took it upon themselves to compile lists of burials in the Eastern Cemetery. Two of these collections survive in the library of the Maine Historical Society.

Of considerable interest is a manuscript volume compiled by William F. Hoadley about 1903. Although he is responsible for a wealth of errors, Hoadley copied many inscriptions and epitaphs from gravestones that have since vanished. A self-appointed sexton and caretaker, he took a proprietary interest in the preservation of the cemetery. Hoadley died at the age of fifty-two in 1912.

Another selective tabulation of significance was carried out by Stephen Marion Watson late in the nineteenth century. Originally published in a local newspaper under the heading of "Tomb Stone Inscriptions in the Eastern Cemetery, Portland, Me.," it is now preserved in Portland Scrap Book (vol. 2, pp. 6-11) at the Maine Historical Society. It consists of 274 items with some attempt to preserve the original style. Unfortunately, there are a number of errors. As with Hoadley, the Watson list contains inscriptions from stones lost before later tabulations were carried out.

An antiquarian of some note, Watson published the Maine Historical and Genealogical Recorder and was a founder of the original Maine Genealogical Society. He was, for twenty years, librarian of the Portland Public Library. Death occurred in Chicago on 7 June 1920 at the age of eighty-five.

It was not until William Augustus Goodwin appeared on the scene that a thorough and systematic survey was initiated. A native of Athens Maine, Goodwin graduated from Bowdoin College in 1843 and received his A.M.

three years later. Trained as a civil engineer, he was employed on route surveys for the Atlantic and St. Lawrence, York and Cumberland, as well as the European and North American railroads. After serving as superintendent of construction for the United States Light House Service, he became Portland's city engineer in 1871. In 1890, Goodwin carried out a monumental survey of the Eastern Cemetery, assisted by William S. Edwards.

The Goodwin survey produced not only a tabulation of 4,136 gravestones, tombs, and grave sites, but also an accurate map of the burial ground. Dividing the cemetery into twelve sections, A through L, Goodwin numbered every known grave and tomb. As a companion to the map, he prepared a double index, one alphabetical by name, the other numerical by site. Each listing included, wherever possible, full name with spouse or parents, date of death, and age. If the gravestone was missing, it was so recorded in the numerical listing. The accuracy of this survey is excellent. However, as in the others, care must be taken to double-check by visiting the site and by comparing with other sources. The Maine Historical Society has the original indexes, with photocopies thereof, as well as a copy of the map. The original map, on linen, is in the files of the Portland Park and Recreation Department.

In producing this copy of the Goodwin survey, this compiler has made various additions and corrections. Burials that occurred after 1890 have been included. No attempt, however, was made to check each of the 4,136 sites.

The ninety-three underground tombs present a special problem. Built over a period of a half-century beginning in the 1790s, they are substantial vaults constructed of brick and stone. The coffins were placed atop one another instead of individual niches. Some are packed, to say the very least. The Tukesbury tomb, for example, contains twenty-eight bodies. Unfortunately, quite a number of the tombs lack monuments identifying the bodies therein. Over the years, as repairs have been made to the wooden planks that cover the entryways, tabulations were made from coffin plates. Both Hoadley and the present compiler have done so when the opportunity presented itself.

In conclusion, it should be pointed out that spelling is a problem that this compiler has not attempted to correct. Each name is transcribed exactly as Goodwin recorded it. Lastly, the Hoadley and the Watson lists have been combined with the Goodwin survey wherever possible. Revolutionary War veterans (*) are indicated. A list of these veterans was published in the Portland Daily Advertiser, 6 June 1898, with a supplement appearing 3 July of the same year.
