TWO GEORGE WASHINGTON MEDALS: MISSING LINKS
IN THE CHAIN OF FRIENDSHIP BETWEEN THE
UNITED STATES AND THE WABANAKI CON-
FEDERACY Harald E. L. Prins 226

Erratum: The fall 1988 issue failed to indicate that the cover photo depicts the Springvale Planing and Shingle Mill, circa 1900. Fred Philpot made the photo, which is reproduced in Harland H. Eastman, ed., Sanford and Springvale, Maine, in the Days of Fred Philpot: A Photographic History. The negative is in the collections of the Sanford Historical Committee.

COVER PHOTO: Portland, the focus of southern Maine's vigorous mercantile economy in the 1830s, offered abundant opportunities for merchants and manufacturers who had sufficient capital at their disposal. In an age before corporate financing, where was this support to be found? Nathan Winslow, Portland merchant, inventor, and manufacturer, provides an interesting case study in the family and religious networks that fostered early nineteenth-century business enterprise. About a quarter century before the cover illustration was drawn, Winslow operated a mercantile business out of the shop behind the carriage on the right. Maine Historical Society Collections.
