Cover Illustration: The drama in this artist's rendering of James Cullen's lynching near Mapleton, 1873, captures the spirit of the stories that still linger in Aroostook County. This event – the only lynching in Maine history – brought reactions from around the state and across the nation. Dena York and Stephen Budney explore the significance of Cullen's demise in contemporary accounts and in the way the details have been embellished over time. On a more peaceable note, Mark Lapping leads off this issue with a study of subsistence and commercial endeavor at the Sabbathday Lake Shaker Colony, and Elwood Watson brings us into the present era with a comparative study of two African-American mayors: William Burney of Augusta and John Jenkins of Lewiston.
