

Taxonomy of the Border II

by Erin Murphy

They took the shoes from the children, gnawed off gummy soles with knives like whittlers on the porch of a shotgun house. They slipped laces from the throats of sneakers and boots, then handed back husks of canvas and rubber as if to say Only we have the power, the power to make a noose.